

Voices to Choices:

Facilitation Kits

People affected by crisis make decisions every day about how to best use their capacities and the resources available to them to meet their needs, but when it comes to the aid that is meant to support them in doing so, they continue to report that they “feel unable to participate in decisions that affect them.”¹ After decades of talk and commitments about putting people at the center of aid, we are still falling short.

The IARAN Voices to Choices report seeks to support efforts to put crisis-affected people in the driver seat of humanitarian action. It endeavors to move the conversation beyond how aid actors use participation to inform their decisions, to look at what is holding back and what may increase crisis-affected people's influence over aid decisions. The report analyzes the inertias internal to the formal humanitarian sector that have held back transformation and, explores how factors external to the formal humanitarian sector may help to break these inertias and catalyze shifts in power.

We have produced these facilitation kits to support the launch of this report, as its primary objective is to inspire discussion among the plurality of humanitarian actors who make up the humanitarian ecosystem. We hope that these kits can help to prompt reflection on how the environment in which all humanitarian actors operate is changing and, what they can do to better respect individual agency and promote transformative participation, putting people at the center of aid.

We hope that these kits are useful in supporting individuals, communities and organizations to host their own discussions, adapting the conversation and making it relevant for them and their stakeholders wherever they are working. Provided you can access a space that can accommodate your participants, the cost of running each of these events should be minimal.

Proposed approaches

Global/World cafes – discussion groups

A global/world café is all about sharing knowledge and challenges in groups – picking each other's brains in a logical progression of discovery, so to speak. Whilst the format is traditionally focused more on the organization's perspective, it could be a useful format for collaboration in order to build a dialogue and to solve the topic's issues at their own pace.

This format involves separating the audience into separate tables, each of which will generally hold 4-5 participants. Each individual (on each table) will have up to 5 minutes to share their initial thoughts on the topic at hand, with an individual writing down the group's thoughts. After 30 minutes or so, the tables begin to rotate, with a table host-staying put to share the ideas with the newly arriving participants. Participants should be encouraged to move to a table with a different group of people. As tables rotate, the host of each table should summarize the thoughts from the previous group to enable the new cohort to build on the contributions of the previous session. After this second round of contributions, the hosts should compile all thoughts from both of their table discussions. These should then be summarized in plenary.

If you would like to run three table sessions, then you can begin the third round by the moderator asking a follow up question to deepen the conversation, the table conversations will then follow the same format as the previous two. Once this final session has been completed, all insights can be shared as part of a wider conversation.

What you will need

People

A moderator for the whole session and a host for each table. The hosts are charged with summarising the notes of the discussion and sharing it with the next group and, at the end, the moderator.

Logistics

A room with space for several tables that can accommodate 4-5 people. This type of event also lends itself well to be held in less formal settings such as over a brown bag lunch or in a cafe.

Resources

Budget to rent the room if required. If using the video introduction, you will need a projector and screen. 2 page printed summary documents on each table. Flip chart or paper on tables to take

Time

You will need between 90-120 minutes to run this event.

Proposed questions

You can focus the discussion however you choose, but some suggested initial questions for the panellists to reflect on are:

1. How do you see decision-making in the humanitarian sector changing?
2. Do the drivers of change and inertias explored in the report resonate in your context? Would you add any?
3. Where do you see change happening and best practice already being mainstreamed?

Proposed agenda

- Welcome to the event, explain the format of the event and invite lots of participation! 5-10 minutes
- Play the V2C video (or briefly summarize key points) 5 minutes
- Group discussion 1 25-35 minutes
- Rotate 5 minutes
- Group discussion 2 25-35 minutes
- Wrap up and summary table discussions and conclusions 15-20 minutes
- If you add a third rotation that will increase the time needed by 30-40 minutes

Where to share the feedback from your session

We would love to hear about the outcomes of your discussions. You can do this in the following way:

- send us your outputs to info@iaran.org and we can load it onto our website – please don't forget to include who you are (also your logo if you want it to be on the final paper) and where you hosted your meeting
- Live tweet your event using the hashtag #Voices2Choices
- Tweet us your top 3 outcomes to @InterAgencyRAN using the hashtag #Voices2Choices

About IARAN

The Inter-Agency Research and Analysts Network (IARAN) is a collaborative hub of humanitarian professionals, and it's our aim to make the humanitarian sector more strategic. We operate to support NGOs in managing future uncertainty using techniques like scenario analysis, to examine the different ways it could unfold over the next one to fifteen years, allowing them to be more responsive, resource efficient and impactful.
